ORDER TO AMBIGUITY

CHOOSE YOUR NEXT APPLICATION

Which application should you work on next?

A familiar role, a better-paid one, a stretch you want. Before you tailor another résumé, check which are worth pursuing.

01 Can you make a case for the work?

Connect the core responsibilities and scope to experience you can explain. Transferable experience counts.

02 Does anything rule it out?

Check your firm requirements and any confirmed barrier. A preference you can negotiate is different from a dealbreaker.

03 What still needs an answer?

Name the missing detail. Keep the role in consideration while you clarify it.

You do not need to match every bullet or have held the same title.

COMPARE WHAT MATTERS TO YOU

Decide what matters most to you.

These questions informed my search. Your priorities decide how much each matters.

01 Your case for the role

How closely do your examples match the work and responsibility level? Where is the stretch?

02 Compensation

Compare pay on the same basis. Separate your minimum from your target, and keep unknown bonus or equity visible.

03 How the work may change with AI

Look at the tasks: routine production, judgment, relationships and responsibility. What could change, and what remains uncertain?

If you use scores, decide how much each criterion counts before comparing jobs.

A WORKED COMPARISON

Which application comes first?

Fictional example: you need at least $50k annual base pay. Above that, moving into project work matters more to you than higher pay. Both roles meet your firm requirements.

A: Project coordinator

WORK AND YOUR EXPERIENCE

Track project deadlines and coordinate people. You organized team schedules; managing a full project would be a stretch.

ANNUAL BASE SALARY (USD)

$55k to $60k

B: Office coordinator

WORK AND YOUR EXPERIENCE

Manage calendars, supplies and invoices. You handled these tasks in your last office role.

ANNUAL BASE SALARY (USD)

$60k to $65k

Apply to A first; keep B active.

A moves you toward project work, meets your pay floor and builds on your experience. At interview, ask how much project responsibility you would have.

Neither posting explains how AI is changing the work. Keep that question open.

COMPARE YOUR OWN OPENINGS

Make your shortlist.

Open the link below. Select one of these options on the site:

Review it yourself

1. Add each job and its employer posting.
2. Record your experience, firm requirements, tradeoffs and next step.
3. Save the jobs. Compare your notes side by side and choose where to act first.

Use your AI

1. Select “Copy comparison template.”
2. Paste it into your AI. Use the experience, priorities and jobs already in that chat, or provide them there.
3. Agree on your criteria and any weights. Review the comparison and choose what to pursue first.

The AI option works entirely in your own chat after you copy the template.

martaavilesmontalvo.github.io/job-search-starter/compare.html